Welcome To Link Armour!

Are You Wasting Time With Unreliable Link Partners? How Can You Know For Sure?

You've spent countless hours building a network of reciprocal links to promote your website. But are you getting the best results possible?

Do you know if your link partners are reciprocating as they promised? Or worse, if any are using "black hat" SEO strategies that could actually harm your site's rankings?

How will you find out? You could literally spend hours or days, tediously checking every single link and every single site. At the end of it all, with tired eyes and a sore back (from sitting in your computer chair), you could believe all is in order.

And the VERY NEXT DAY, any number of your partners could remove your link - or add one pointing to a "Bad Neighborhood" - putting their site and yours at risk of being penalized by Google.

Will you even find out before it's too late?

Your Site's Future Depends Upon Your Link Partners

No matter how much work you've put into building and promoting your website, you really can't control it's future. You can't control where it lands in the search engine results. You can do things to influence it, but the final result is out of your hands.

Because the reality is your site's future depends upon the honesty of your link partners. Good ones will help you rise to the top of search engine results, stimulating tons of traffic and revenue.

But bad ones can do much more than just waste your time. If your link partners use "black hat" SEO techniques (such as cloaking, hidden text and doorway pages), the search engines will consider your link an endorsement.

And if they catch you linking to "bad neighborhoods" such as Free-For-All pages and link farms, the guilt-by-association can get you relegated to supplemental results, or banned altogether.

Is that a risk you're willing to take?

Trust... But Verify

Just imagine waking up tomorrow and discovering that your web site has disappeared from Google's results entirely. Your PageRank has suddenly dropped to "0". Traffic dries up, along with the income your site was generating.

You stare at your computer screen in disbelief. How could this happen? You've never used "black hat" SEO strategies. You've been a responsible webmaster, with an honest, valuable website. And you've been very selective with your outbound links.

But what you didn't know was that not all of your link partners were so selective. Some were trading links with anyone willing, and were banned because of it. You didn't know because you hadn't checked on them lately.

A reciprocal link is a commitment. It involves a certain level of trust. But if your link partners don't hold up their end of the bargain, your site suffers.

So if you want to get the most benefit from your link campaign (and protect your site from guilt by association), it's vital that you constantly monitor your link partners.

At any time, your link on their site could be buried or even deleted.

Find Out Instantly If Any Partner is Making Your Link Worthless
By Using The "No Follow" Attribute

Some link partners can be sneaky. They want their share of your PageRank - which they get from your link to them. But they just don't want to return the favor. They want to keep all of their PageRank credit to themselves.

So they put a sneaky little bit of HTML code in with the link back to your page - the "No Follow" attribute, also known as a "link condom." This nasty little bit of code doesn't change how your link looks on the page, or whether or not a human visitor can click it back to your site. It's impossible to detect on the surface.

But search engine spiders see it. And it tells them to ignore your link, so you get absolutely no credit for it. Like it isn't even there.

Until now, the only way to catch your link partners using the No Follow attribute was to painstakingly check their source code. Which took forever.

But Link Armour automatically checks every link for the No Follow attribute - and puts that information at your fingertips, where you can verify it in nanoseconds, every single day.
